New Keynesian is dead, long live New Keynesian economics. A trade dispute is on the verge of a trade war across three regional political continents: South-East Asia, the North American Union, and the Western European Union (E.U.). With an expansionary trade route -- the Commonwealth of Nations, that includes two strategically valuable trade routes in the Eastern bloc and the southern hemisphere: the Eastern E.U. and the Panama Canal in Panama, Central America (with access giving by the Polynesian countries to the Indies and the Americas, and vice versa). Enabling further entry to vital mineral resources and oil reserves in South and Central America, the United Russian Federation, the African Union, and the Middle East Union.

In 2018, an anticipatory financial shock led to the demise of all notions of contemporary economics -- where a central-ruling bank regulates key inflationary and/or deflationary measures to spur economic growth and to forestall an economic depression cause by excess supply.

With the E.U. facing a major setback with the Brexit in the United Kingdom, ultra-nationalists maneuvered to capitalized on the vote to incite fervor to reinvigorate the British state -- in the form of, a competing model that outmaneuvers the United States (U.S.) global economic dominance on trade, commerce, and capital. Which led to multinational heads, in the United States, to increasingly govern market assets -- including banking, loan, and credit shares, to seek an omnipotent advantage over the increasing wealth of the appointed viceroys of the Commonwealth of Nations.

Understood as the beginning of the U.S. corporate governorship. Which aims to govern the free market and to outcompete all foreign state-private interests to realize global economic supremacy and neo-expansionism -- a strategic imperative for both the far-right and neo-Fascist elements of the Republican party.

Pressures to deregulate, coupled with the vast absorption of capital amongst the U.S. business elite (and the flood of expenditure assets to the Commonwealth of Nations), the global economy went haywire to the extent that an anticipatory aftershock burst out into the global markets in the manifestation of a purchasing shock. Within a matter of months, unleashing a deadly trade dispute with the People's Republic of China -- whereby, competing corporate interests battled for competing self-interests.

Imposing competing prices and conditions to dominate a fairer and larger share of the diminishing international markets (creating havoc to the Commons by pursuing atypical immigration policy decision-making. Indivertibly causing lasting damage to the North Atlantic Free Trade Agreement's core stipulation of open markets and the free flow of labor-capital).

Corporate competition on the verge of corporate warfare to maintain and/or (re)gain control of profits and long-term interests. Leading to competing interests in South America (especially, Venezuela and Colombia) and the Russian Federation to battle for control of short-term gains to negotiate terms with long-term decision makers.

A crippling crisis that led to the end of Theresa May's prime ministership and the collapse of neo-capitalism on a planetary scale. Preceding further progress on the internationalist model -- revitalizing key aspects of New Keynesian economics. Such that, political federalism blossoms into political anarchy. Where the Leviathan will always be the supreme sovereign of the nation-state.
