Political Radicalism and the Suspension of Parliament

The Leading Professor Miguel Angel Sanchez-Rey [The Grandmaster, The Master of Space-Time]

The Academy of Advance Science and the Technological Sciences
Radicalism politics pervades the streets of London, not far from 10 Downing Street. And a prime minister of utmost caliber stands in the halls of the House of Commons idealizing the breakup of the United Kingdom (U.K.) and the European Union (E.U.), as though it’s a matter of, “moving forward” from the affairs of the nation-state. That Prime Minister Boris Johnson can justify a deal for Brexit as though it’s some sort of road to realism, rather than a matter of political principle influenced by constitutionalism and a strong union of nations guided by the rule of law and the international order.

Grounded on open borders and economic progress, the current political tone in the streets of downtown Abbey is one of impassioned opposition to a formulation of political theory that is both indecent and barbaric. Barbaric, in that the British state has been cult-figured by ultra-nationalism, that there is no exemplification of the U.K. governments downright decision to quietly leave the European nation-state while having pillage and plundered a nation-state that provided security and prosperity to the U.K. for more than 50 years.

But the unwavering public has observed the queen’s willingness to side with a Tory-government so involved in extreme tactics to realize radical ends -- that is, there is justification amongst the far-right wing, to tear apart a union design to discipline the E.U. from falling victim to disunity and conflict, to oblige by global standards, established after the Second World War, to forestall bloodshed and large-scale warfare. Yet there can be no questionability, that political radicalism has met its terminal demise, but even then, incrementally, tearing itself apart with gridlock beyond the English channels. In that, Boris Johnson and his cabinet, vehemently commits an odious act to incite disunity to realize a political and economic ideology that is now deem to be out of place with contemporary political economics.
Even, if the reigning British establishment is to disregard the House of Commons, a deal Brexit is yet to be a unanimous consensus to the E.U. parliament, let alone to the population of Brussels. Never before has the Tory-establishment been out of touch with the realism of constitutionalism, yet wayward in their commitment to disobey the supreme sovereign -- the Leviathan, to appoint radical ideology of ultra-national politics while desperate to be seen as a global power alongside a crumbling European state.

To enact what is to be compelled and what it is to be efficacious, to protect and to uphold the Leviathan as the supreme sovereign of the nation-state, the current British government is null in its attribution to global security and yet auto-immune to contemporary world history; that ultra-nationalism is favorable in comparison to cosmopolitanism. But ultra-nationalism, the project of British nationalist sentiment, risk to break apart the federalist order of the nation-state and the European cultural tradition. Nonetheless, a malicious war-crime of the most vehement kind.
Only then, to implement neo-expansionary motives that are counter to the early Enlightenment and scientifically unsound to the empirical political axiomatics of liberal reform and social progress; of what is empirically known to be factual of a civil and decent society, without affiliation to neo-Fascist ideological reasoning (or radical ends of extreme national-pride cause by an effort for historical superiority and non-cooperation to gain an unfair economic advantage).

Whereby all notions of the British international standard of civility and culturalism is superseded. In which, the ruling British government consciously defies the Leviathan without any deductive foresight of the violent aspects of the state-of-nature of competing regional powers. Instead suspends the House of Commons (and the House of Lords) for reasons that are apart from ineffectual.