No Deal – No Brexit

Westminster Parliament has observed the pitfalls of the ides of March, where the vehement head of state of the United Kingdom (U.K.) and the English prime minister has been sent to their death, by the European state, through the ratification of no deal. The former prime minister of the imaginary British state must now contend with a European parliament that is anguished by the queen’s defiance of the supreme sovereign of the nation-state -- what became the Leviathan of economic democracy.

The New Labor party has sung a socialist melody to incite the British public and yet the speaker of the house must now bravely contend with certain death. While the leader of New Labor, Jeremy Corbyn, must confront execution by her majesty the queen. In a symbolic gesture to Oliver Cromwell’s dissolution of parliament, Boris Johnson suspends parliament by application of intimidation and parliamentary mayhem. A mischievous trickery launched by the British aristocracy.
Yet the Tory government sees British ultra-nationalism as a safe passage to ethnic pride and economic superiority, instead the U.K. parliament must confront the loopy side of British politics. An end in sight to no-Brexit, means the dead bodies of thousands of European citizens by the state-of-nature of regional conflict between competing powers. Battling to assert their nationalist sentiment to reach greater heights of delirious celebration.

So, by no deal ratification, the former prime minister Theresa May, has been sent back to face near-certain mortality by futility. And the queen is to be quietly laid to rest. The superstate is to continue on, i.e., to become the federation of democratic industries, while the British crown is to be fully dismantled by mid-centuries end. Yet permanently exiled from the Eurozone and the commonwealth of nation-states -- the aristocratic order of political anarchy has closed the book on the disintegrated royal bloodline, by authoritative action [to do what it must and to do what it takes] to secure the unionization of industrial production and the tranquility of the democratic workforce.
