The Day the U.S. Stood Still at the Hill
The Democratic Party, along with the Republican Party, debate at the House of Representatives the articles of impeachment; meant to put an end to almost four years of questionable and corrupt decision making. Where the liberal establishment will be able to move America forward into the 2020 American presidential race; with some sense of contentment.

Even as Donald Trump defends his tenure, the house leader desperately conveys her support to have President Donald Trump remove from higher office and to bring the political establishment into a new era of American liberal politics; where blue-wave fantasy overtakes the United States by storm; regaining its stature as a global military power, i.e., especially, at the forefront of economic leadership. Restoring the U.S. (United States) support for intergovernmental cooperation by revitalizing globalization; propelling the European member states to regain their self-image. In which, the U.S. will set out to promote democracy by rooting out third world leaders who oppose the corporate model.
Either way, it’s a huge loss for both the Democrats and the Republicans. Even as behind the scenes; there are talks of resignations and court sentences, the Democratic Party must contend with a bitter 2020 American Presidential Election; where massive funding will likely sway in favor of the corporate money managers. Though House Majority Leader, Nancy Pelosi, received a majority of the vote to begin the impeachment proceedings at the Senate, the corporate-sector grapples with establishing a charismatic Presidential Republican candidate that will motivate their constituency to slaughter the party-Democrats in the 2020 United States elections. Yet incited by President Donald Trump’s (potential) resignation -- with long-term repercussions that may lead to severe political retaliation, will only encourage their base to suppress progressive policies and to antagonize progressive liberalism. Most importantly, driven by a corporate model that knows no end; besides the U.S. Supreme Court. And yet with no end in sight.
When the right thing to do is to vote Donald Trump completely out of office, rather than have the Democratic Party make an example of the American corporate establishment. Knowing that the corporate sector is playing an increasingly expansionary role in funding the U.S. elections.

Even then a liberal United States Supreme Court is currently non-existent. Whether it to be the former Justice Anthony Kennedy, or any Associate Justice, the swing vote isn’t an adequate method to long-term constitutionality. In any case, the corporate model predominates.
